

Early Journal Content on JSTOR, Free to Anyone in the World

This article is one of nearly 500,000 scholarly works digitized and made freely available to everyone in the world by JSTOR.

Known as the Early Journal Content, this set of works include research articles, news, letters, and other writings published in more than 200 of the oldest leading academic journals. The works date from the mid-seventeenth to the early twentieth centuries.

We encourage people to read and share the Early Journal Content openly and to tell others that this resource exists. People may post this content online or redistribute in any way for non-commercial purposes.

Read more about Early Journal Content at <http://about.jstor.org/participate-jstor/individuals/early-journal-content>.

JSTOR is a digital library of academic journals, books, and primary source objects. JSTOR helps people discover, use, and build upon a wide range of content through a powerful research and teaching platform, and preserves this content for future generations. JSTOR is part of ITHAKA, a not-for-profit organization that also includes Ithaka S+R and Portico. For more information about JSTOR, please contact support@jstor.org.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW — SEPARATION OF POWERS — DELEGATION — STARE DECISIS. — A Texas statute punished as a crime the operation of pool rooms in any district that voted to prohibit them. This statute had been held unconstitutional by the Texas Supreme Court, contrary to a prior decision of the co-ordinate Court of Criminal Appeals. Cf. Ex parte Mitchell, 177 S. W. 953, with Ex parte Francis, 72 Tex. Cr. R. 304, 165 S. W. 147. The question of the constitutionality of the statute is now brought once more to the Court of Criminal Appeals. Held, that the statute is constitutional. Ex parte Mode, 180 S. W. 708.

The constitutionality of liquor local option laws is now well settled. See JOYCE, INTOXICATING LIQUORS, §§ 368, 371. Most courts have rested their decision on the ground that the statutes are not a delegation of legislative power but are laws to take effect on a contingency. Locke's Appeal, 72 Pa. St. 491; People v. McBride, 234 Ill. 146, 84 N. E. 865. However, as the voters pass on exactly the same question as the legislature and relieve it of responsibility, it is submitted that such a statute is in fact a delegation, and the same courts have so decided in case the referendum is to the voters of an entire state. State v. Hayes, 61 N. H. 264; Opinion of the Justices, 160 Mass. 586, 36 N. E. 488. Contra, State v. Frear, 142 Wis. 320, 125 N. W. 961. The law is better justified as a delegation within the field of those local regulations which it is proper for the legislature to delegate. Commonwealth v. Bennett, 108 Mass. 27. Cf. Feek v. Township Board of Bloomingdale, 82 Mich. 393, 47 N. W. 37. See COOLEY, CONSTITUTIONAL LIMITATIONS, 7 ed., 173, 174; 19 HARV. L. REV. 203. This argument applies even more emphatically to pool rooms than to liquor establishments, as the former are everywhere recognized as a proper subject of local control. City of Burlingame v. Thompson, 74 Kan. 393, 86 Pac. 449; Cole v. Village of Culbertson, 86 Neb. 160, 125 N. W. 287. Hence, the Court of Criminal Appeals was justified in treating the statute as constitutional unless it was precluded from so doing by the decision of the Supreme Court. Prior to this decision, the Supreme Court had held itself bound by the decisions of the Court of Criminal Appeal on criminal matters. Green v. Southard, 94 Tex. 470, 61 S. W. 705; Commissioners' Court v. Beall, 98 Tex. 104, 81 S. W. 526. To have continued such a course would have avoided the absurd anomaly of two conflicting laws in a single state which has now resulted from treating the question of what decision is binding as one, not of subject matter, but solely of the court where the action is brought. However, as the question in the principal case was one of criminal law, the Court of Criminal Appeals properly disregarded the decision of the Supreme Court and followed their former holding.

CORPORATIONS — DISSOLUTION — DEVOLUTION OF PROPERTY ON DISSOLUTION: CHOSÉS IN ACTION. — After the expiration of the charter of a corporation, the business was continued by the single stockholder in the corporate name. By statute an expired corporation continued in existence for an indefinite period for the sole purpose of winding up its business. (1915, KY. STAT., § 561.) After the dissolution certain deposits which were held by foreign banks in the name of the corporation were assessed for taxation both at the corporate home and at the domicile of the stockholder. Held, that the tax should be collected at the stockholder's domicile. Ewald's Executor v. City of Louisville, 181 S. W. 1095 (Ky.).

By the old common law rule debts due a corporation were extinguished by its dissolution. 1 BL. COMM. 484; Bank of Mississippi v. Duncan, 56 Miss. 166. Later the rule in regard to personalty, that it reverts to the Crown as bona vacantia, was extended to apply to the debts of an extinct corporation. In re Higginson and Dean, [1899] 1 Q. B. 325. See 19 HARV. L. REV. 610. The hardship of such a rule is now largely obviated by statutes authorizing the courts to dispose of the assets of the corporation, usually by the appointment of receivers. But in our courts, even in the absence of a statute, equity, apparently